He is estimated to be responsible for up to 2,000 murders while carrying cocaine from Colombia to New York, Miami and Southern California. [3] [4] [5] He was shot and killed on September 3, 2012, at the age of 69. [6] Blanco was one of the richest and most dangerous women in the world and the most powerful drug lord in the world. She was the first billionaire woman to be guilty, ruling her multi-million dollar drug trafficking empire with an iron fist, and became one of the deadliest women of all time. Biography Early life Blanco Cartagena was born, colombia, on the north coast of the country. He and his mother, Ana Lucia Restrepo,[7] moved to Medellín when he was three years old. When he got there, he quickly adopted a criminal lifestyle. Blanco's ex, Charles Cosby, described how, at the age of 11, Blanco was abducted, worked for ransom, and eventually shot a boy from a luxury flat near his neighborhood. [1] [8] Blanco became a pickpocket before he was 13. She ran away from home at the age of 16 to escape the sexual assaults of her mother's boyfriend and resorted to looting in Medellín until she was 20. [1] [8] Drug business See: Miami Drug War Blanco was a major figure in the history of drug trafficking from Colombia to Miami, New York and California. In the mid-1970s, Blanco and her second husband, Alberto Bravo, immigrated illegally to the U.S. on false passports and settled in Queens, New York. They set up a pretty big coke. There, and in April 1975, Blanco was charged with federal drug conspiracy along with 30 subordinates. He fled to Colombia before his arrest, but settled in Miami in the late 1970s. Law enforcement's fight to end the cocaine influx into Miami led to the creation of CENTAC 26 (Central Tactical Unit), a joint operation between the Miami-Dade Police Department and the DEA's anti-drug operation. [10] Blanco was involved in drug-related violence known as the Miami War on Drugs or the Cocaine Cowboy Wars that ravaged Miami in the early 1970s and early 1980s. It was a time when cocaine was traded more than marijuana. [12] The lawless and corrupt atmosphere, primarily created by Blanco's operations, led to gangsters being called Cocaine Cowboys and the way they did business as the Miami drug war. The distribution network spanning the United States brought in $80,000,000 a month. [1] His violent business style brought government scrutiny to south Florida and led to the destruction of his organization and the free face of the drug scene in Miami at the time. In 1984, Blanco's willingness to use violence against his opponents in Miami or anyone who dissatisfied him made his opponents attempt to assassinate him constantly. He fled to California to escape the blows to him. [Citation required] he was arrested by DEA agents at his home where he was arrested on February 18, 1985 and held without bail. After his trial, Blanco was sentenced to more than a decade in prison. [13] While in prison, he continued to carry out the cocaine business effectively with the help of his son Michael Blanco. The Miami-Dade State's Attorney's Office found enough evidence to charge Blanco with three counts of murder by pressuring one of Blanco's lieutenants. However, the case collapsed for technical reasons related to the phone sex scandal between star witness la female secretaries. In 2002, Blanco had a heart attack while in prison. [14] In 2004, Blanco was released from prison and deported to Medellín, Colombia. [1] Blanco was last seen at Bogota Airport in May 2007 before he died in 2012. [1] On the night of September 3, 2012, Murder, Blanco died after being shot twice; Once on the head and once on the shoulder by a motorcyclist in Medellín, Colombia. [15] 29. The middle-aged gunman climbed off the back of a motorcycle outside the store, entered, removed a gun and shot Blanco twice before calmly walking back. His bike and he's getting lost in town. [16] He was 69 years old. [5] Blanco's first husband was Carlos Trujillo. Together they had three sons, Dixon, Uber, and Osvaldo,[1] all poorly educated,[14] who were all killed in Colombia after being deported following prison sentences in the United States. [17] Her second husband was Alberto Bravo. In 1975, Blanco faced Bravo, who was also his business partner, millions of dollars short of the cartel's profits, which they co-founded in the parking lot of bogota nightclub. The Guardian reported: Blanco, then 32, pulled out a pistol, Bravo responded by producing an Uzi sub-machine gun, and after a burning gunfight he and six of his bodyguards lay dead. Blanco, who suffered only a minor gunshot wound to the stomach, recovered and soon moved to Miami, where his body count - and fame for ruthlessness - continued to climb. [5] Blanco's youngest son, Michael Corleone Blanco, and her third husband, Darío Sepúlveda. [5] Sepúlveda left him in 1983, returned to Colombia and kidnapped Michael when he and Blanco agreed on who would take custody. Blanco paid to assassinate Sepúlveda in Colombia, and his son returned to him in Miami. [17] According to the Miami New Times, Michael's father and older siblings were killed before reaching adult life. Her mother was in prison for most of her childhood and teenage years and was raised by her grandmother and legal guardians. [17] In 2012, Michael was placed under house arrest after being arrested in May on charges of two charges of cocaine trafficking and conspiracy to traffic cocaine. [18] In 2018, she appeared in the Investigation Discovery documentary series Evil Lives Here in an episode to describe her lonely childhood. In 2019, he took part in VH1 docuseries Cartel Crew, a descendant of drug lords. It also works in a clothing brand, Puro Blanco, which means its infamous mother. [19] Blanco was clearly bisexual. [20] [21] According to The New York Post, court records show that Blanco was a drug addict who consumed large quantities of 'basuco', a powerful form of smoke-open, untreated cocaine... he foresed men and women to have sex at gunpoint and often had bisexual. Her favorite items included an emerald and gold MAC-10 machine gun, Eva Perón pearl and a tea set once used by the Queen of England [sic]. The report continues: In court, it was revealed that Blanco killed three ex-husbands, as well as strippers, business opponents - and innocent bystanders, including a 4-year-old boy. [14] [5] According to her youngest son, Michael, Blanco became a born-again Christian.
